Fifth Annual Reunion

The annual reunion of former residents of Bryant Pond, Maine, was held at the Hotel Statler, Boston, Saturday, October 28. It was indeed a most successful gathering of those who had left the little town in the early days of settlement.

New England supper was served at 7 p. m. The tables were decorated with red and white. At each place was a centerpiece of red and white. The tables were a large part of the success of the reunion.

The program was over and tables were cleared. The program consisted of a variety of songs, recitations, and a play. The play was "The Little Town of Bryant Pond" by Fred Crosswell.

Echoes from the Past

Gleaned from an Old Advertiser
Published in 1859

A copy of the Norway Advertiser, published Dec. 8, 1859, might be called a "War Number" because of allusions to the impending rebellion of states.

The copy of our inspection carries the motto, "Independence in Everything, Neutral in Nothing," which is suggestive of a combative attitude in politics and community affairs.

One item about the execution of John Brown that took place Friday before publication was not complimentary to the victim. Apparently the story was a personal paragraph by the editor, who charged John Brown as a victim of mis-education.

A reprint from the Scientific American of Oct. 22, 1859 is a comparative cost of giving the following prices per gallon: Kerosene, $1.00; lamp oil, 65c; whale oil, $1.00; lard oil, $1.25; sperm oil, $1.75; and burning fluid, 70c.

Local news are missing and must be gleaned from advertisements. Chas. C. Cole, in Norway Block, would change fluid lamps to kerosene, repair valves and fit spectacles.

Dr. W. R. Evans, surgeon, dentist, opposite the Universalist Church, Crockett's Studio made ambrotypes and wanted not to fade or crack as many do.

He warned the public not to be lured by traveling artists. E. W. Howe, having taken over the store of J. and E. Howe offered a general stock from lace to family flour.

Isaac A. Dennison, also offered a variety stock, including feathers and dry goods. G. W. Verrill & Co., opposite Elm House had a dry goods store.

H. B. Downer, having come from Bucksfield to the Kimball Shop, was prepared to do carriage and ornamental painting. Z. B. Starbird, opposite the Elms, made boots and shoes of genuine French calf skin.

David F. Noyes had one ton of paper hangings in his warehouse. From 6 to 14 to 25 cents per roll. Dunham & Libby, machinists in the basement of Goodwin & Mixer Cabinet Shop, were in the market to make all kinds of machinery for mill work.

They featured a steam engine just installed for power at their shop. Dr. A. Thompson, successor to Dr. P. Hurd, extracted teeth by the aid of an electro-galvanic battery and advertised to perform the work "without the amount of pain usually accompanying the operation."

Sam A. Faxon & Co. had a stock of shoes purchased of Mixer & Watson, to be sold very low. A. B. Bartlett, who recently settled at Wyandott, Kansas Territory, left his un- settled business in the hands of Jonathan Blake.

Eleven business men signed an agreement to close their stores every night at 8 o'clock. Mixer & Watson called all debtors to make a settlement before January 1.

A. S. Bartlett supplied clapboards and shingles from Berlin, N. H. Clapboards were $8 to $15, shingles, No. 1, $12 to $14. Otis True offered hospitality at the Elms House.

Out of town advertisers were J. B. Smart, blacksmith, located on the hill opposite Hersey's Foundry, South Paris; Stephen Lovejoy, deputy sheriff, Rumford; H. F. Blanchard, attorney, Rumford Point; Kimball & Bryant, attorneys and Alfred Black, attorney, all of Paris; Samuel Richardson, watch maker, opposite the Methodist Church, South Paris; and C. P. Kimball, carriage repository, Portland.

A large crop of patent medicines appeared, led by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co.'s Ayer's Sarsaparilla, Cathartic Pills and Cherry Pectoral. Fonsel's Pabulum Vitae for consumption was a sure remedy. Dr. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters were urged for all forms of disorders, and especially for nursing mothers.

A Philadelphia doctor could supply a marriage guide and the Howard Association, a benevolent institution, was out to cure a variety of diseases on which great stress was laid. Of course medicine was free, but treatment cost something.

KEZAR FALLS
Ten members from the L. M. R. Club and three from the 21 Club attended the York County meeting of Federated Clubs, held at South Berwick, Thursday. The program was full of interest and all returned home feeling that an enjoyable and profitable day had been passed.

National Bank Protection

Means a great deal to you as a depositor. The Federal Reserve Act which compelled all National Banks to become member banks, increased their efficiency and greatly strengthened them. The Glass-Steagall Act, passed at the last session of the United States Congress, provides further safeguards and deposit insurance.

Our books are examined by National Bank Examiners and sworn statements of condition must be published, thus enabling our customers to keep informed of the bank's condition. There is no better protection than that.

For Your Money

This is a new bank, free from doubtful or depreciated assets, it is owned and managed locally and is anxious to serve you.

Norway National Bank

IF you have something to sell and are in a hurry to sell it, let the Intelligence Column of The Norway Advertiser prove its ability as a speedy and efficient sales medium.

Our Four-Footed Neighbors

Agnes F. Benson, North Fork, Cal.

Two of our most ubiquitous neighbors are the gopher and the ground squirrel. The former I have not yet seen and he has eaten up all my choicest plants, the bulb of a tiger lily, several cucumber vines, and has left his mounds and holes all through the garden. I am told he is about the size of a mole, but with visible eyes and a soft brown coat. The ground squirrel is everywhere and a general nuisance in the grain fields and orchards. In appearance the ground squirrel looks like an undersized, ground shaggy gray squirrel; the tail is slightly shorter and less plume-like and often the fur on neck and shoulders is so white as to give the effect of a mane. Often also, there are spots of light color along the sides. In many places fields are honeycombed with ground squirrel holes, the banks along the roads are a favorite location, also, and I have seen several holes in the center of gravel and oil surfaced roads.

Pluffy, our Maine breed cat, has plainly shown her disgust at squirrels that run into a hole in the ground instead of up a tree, but she and her family have been very efficient in ridding the premises of the pests which overrun the yard, barn, and corral when we came.

Three old friends are with us, the raccoon, the gray squirrel, and the skunk. The first two seem more plentiful than in Maine and I have seen some enormous "coon tracks. Skunks have wrought havoc among our neighbors' chickens, but so far we have had only olfactory evidence of their presence.

With the gopher and the ground squirrel should have been mentioned a species of the Oregon mole which turns up where, though apparently without doing much damage. It has a very pointed nose, no visible eyes, and tremendous front feet as compared to the rest of its body. Ash-can Sam (a local product of the Free-County Jail, his mother being an official inmate, not a criminal) in his youth and inexperience thought moles desirable game at one time and had back yard streams with so many that a turkey buzzard felt it his duty to investigate conditions.

House and field mice and the brown rat seem to be identical with those of Maine we have seen the first and the second and third seem to be scarce, but a few night ago one of the mother cats brought in three young kangaroo rats for her children. They were about as large as half-grown house rats, soft grayish tan with light streaks, with short front legs and very long hind ones and a long, flat tail with short hairs along its sides and a tuft at the end. There are said to be red foxes here, but the gray fox is much more common. It is longer in the legs and tail than the red fox, its back and the top of the tail being almost black, the sides gray and the neck, jaws and lower sides tan, while the throat is white. They do not have dens, but favor hollow trees or holes among the rocks.

The opossum really belongs lower in the valley than that, but a number were brought up here a few years ago and have apparently multiplied.

We have three varieties of rabbits, the California jack-rabbit, the cottontail, and the brush rabbit which is a near relative of the cottontail. The jack is not much heavier than the snowshoe rabbit, but is built on racing lines with longer legs than the Eastern rabbit. In color, the jack is rather light tan with darker strip on the back. We have one that feeds nearly every morning on the slope back of the house. Plum, the young Australian sheep dog, has set his heart on getting that jack and puts his best into the chase while the jack just bounces along, stopping once in a while to look back to see if the dog is still coming. Molly Cottontail is not nearly as large as the snowshoe rabbit, has rather short ears, a brown coat, and a powder-puff for a tail. The brush rabbit is still smaller—hardly larger than a big gray squirrel—and closely resembles the cottontail only that the tail is not so white. Both the cottontail and the brush rabbit are preferable to the jack for food.

As a predator, the coyote is in a class by himself. We have concerns nearly every evening and early morning and the effect is startling when one is awakened from sound sleep. The noise starts with yaps like those of a cur dog then shifts into yodels and insane laughter worse than that of a loon. The coyotes here are of the larger size, standing as tall as the average German shepherd dog, and having the same gray coat, though more slender legs and body. For a time there was a bounty on coyote scalps and there was a noticeable reduction in their numbers, but some hunters with a yen for easy money imported scalps from Arizona and Nevada, their act was discovered and the bounty repealed. Now the coyotes are so thick that they are a menace to poultry and small game, complaints are coming in that they are killing fawn and even young pigs and calves.

The mountain lion—cougar—is a rarity in the foothills, though still quite common in the higher mountains. The heavy snows last winter drove at least one down and we saw his tracks many times, though we were not fortunate enough to catch a glimpse of him.

Deer are very numerous, especially in the winter when snow covers the forest higher up. It was not unusual to see herds of five to twenty-five last winter. There is no "feeding" as in Maine, though where feed was plenty, as in the oak groves, the same groups seemed to stay day after day. These are not the Virginia white tailed deer common in the East, but are mule deer and black tails. In coloring, there is not much difference, they are reddish in summer and grayer in winter, and the size is about the same, though they may be a little heavier in the body than the Maine deer. The chief difference I noted were at the ends, the antlers having branched prongs and the tails being shorter and much less bushy. In fact, the mule deer have tails more like calves' tails, very light in color with a black stripe down the back. The venison is coarser grained and tougher than that of the white tailed deer, at least our sample was. The season is open now and many cars go by with deer on the fenders. Up to the night before the season opened, one thousand licenses had been sold at the Ranger Headquarters at North Fork.

Last, but not least (except in size) are our frogs. They are hardly bigger than one's thumb, but very musical. They came early in the spring, the first making his appearance in the horse trough at the corral. One stays in the scarlet runners that climb the back porch, another is in the tank to our water-cooled refrigerator and grumbles when I pour in more water. They begin singing a little before sundown and are still at it when we go to sleep. Last year they stayed till Thanksgiving.

NO VALUE

The following poem, "No Value" by George Allan England, was inspired, Mr. England explains, "by a shipping clerk writing those words on a receipt, I gave me the body of my niece, aged 18, when I took it on a train for home."

By George Allan England
He yawned, and laid his cigarette aside,
And on the baggage check grimly stamped:
"No value."
Two simple words. Scrawled words,
Some day, I'll swear, I'll swear,
Just a note
Of that poor shipper's worthlessness,
She said, "as she has been a girl!" And so
We dreamed,
Until the echo of her children's feet, it seemed,
Their laughter, even their tears, grew wiser
And fast.

To our life's dream-stuff—golden threads that gleamed
Through years of difficult waiting.
Then death came, they passed,
Those dreams, and all our hopes and all our hoping.

And so we laid her in her coffin gray, and cast
her home, beside her, all our youth,
And, dazed and groping,
We tried to find the vacant place
Where Autumn oak leaves would be falling,
Left her there,
Who never yet had read the Book of Life,
Her face
Will pass, still fair,
"No Value," Yes, he wrote that down, and gave
For receipt, "No Value," as we have her toward the grave.

Only a girl with dark vague hopes, half-knew
Who must first find the antediluvian path, alone
Dark paths and cold, they seemed, for girlhood
Only a young, dead girl, unwept, unwept,
"No Value." And the world had ceased to care.

All the gold from here to Babylon might burn
To ashes, unneeded, for we bore our dead,
"No Value." Ah, the deep, long thoughts we knew
And our dim eyes that watched him there,
and read!

No value, now, had staid, dawn or dew,
Sunset or cloud, or the white blaze of noon,
Or Springtime's mantle green, with flowers
Or the unfolding loveliness of June,
Or earth or sky, or ocean's tide—how true!
How true he wrote—nor guessed that truth,
nor thought!

Note—Mr. England resided at Bryant
Pond for a time, some years ago, where he wrote many poems and stories.
